

Suspicious Voting Patterns?

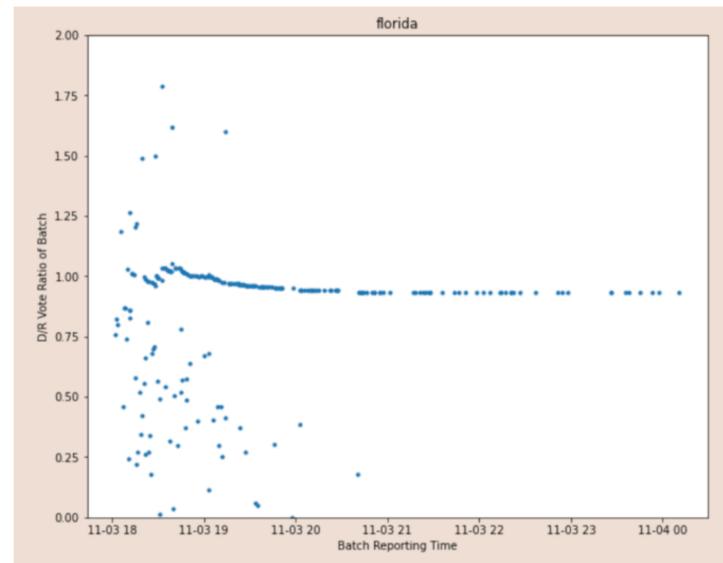

Jason Ross · 6 days ago

After reading this article about what are presented as anomalous changes in the ratio of Biden/Trump votes as mail-in ballots were processed in swing states, I decided to create charts for all fifty states and post them here.

According to the twitter posting upon which the article was based, charts of the Biden / Trump vote over time (per processed batch) show both in-person voting — in the form of more randomly dispersed data points — and the processing of mail-in ballots, which, being mixed in the mail delivery and sorting process, would have a more uniform distribution.

The article points out that in Florida — a state that Trump won—the ratio of Biden / Trump votes goes down slowly as the batches are processed, perhaps due to more rural areas voting for Trump. This is claimed to be the expected result.

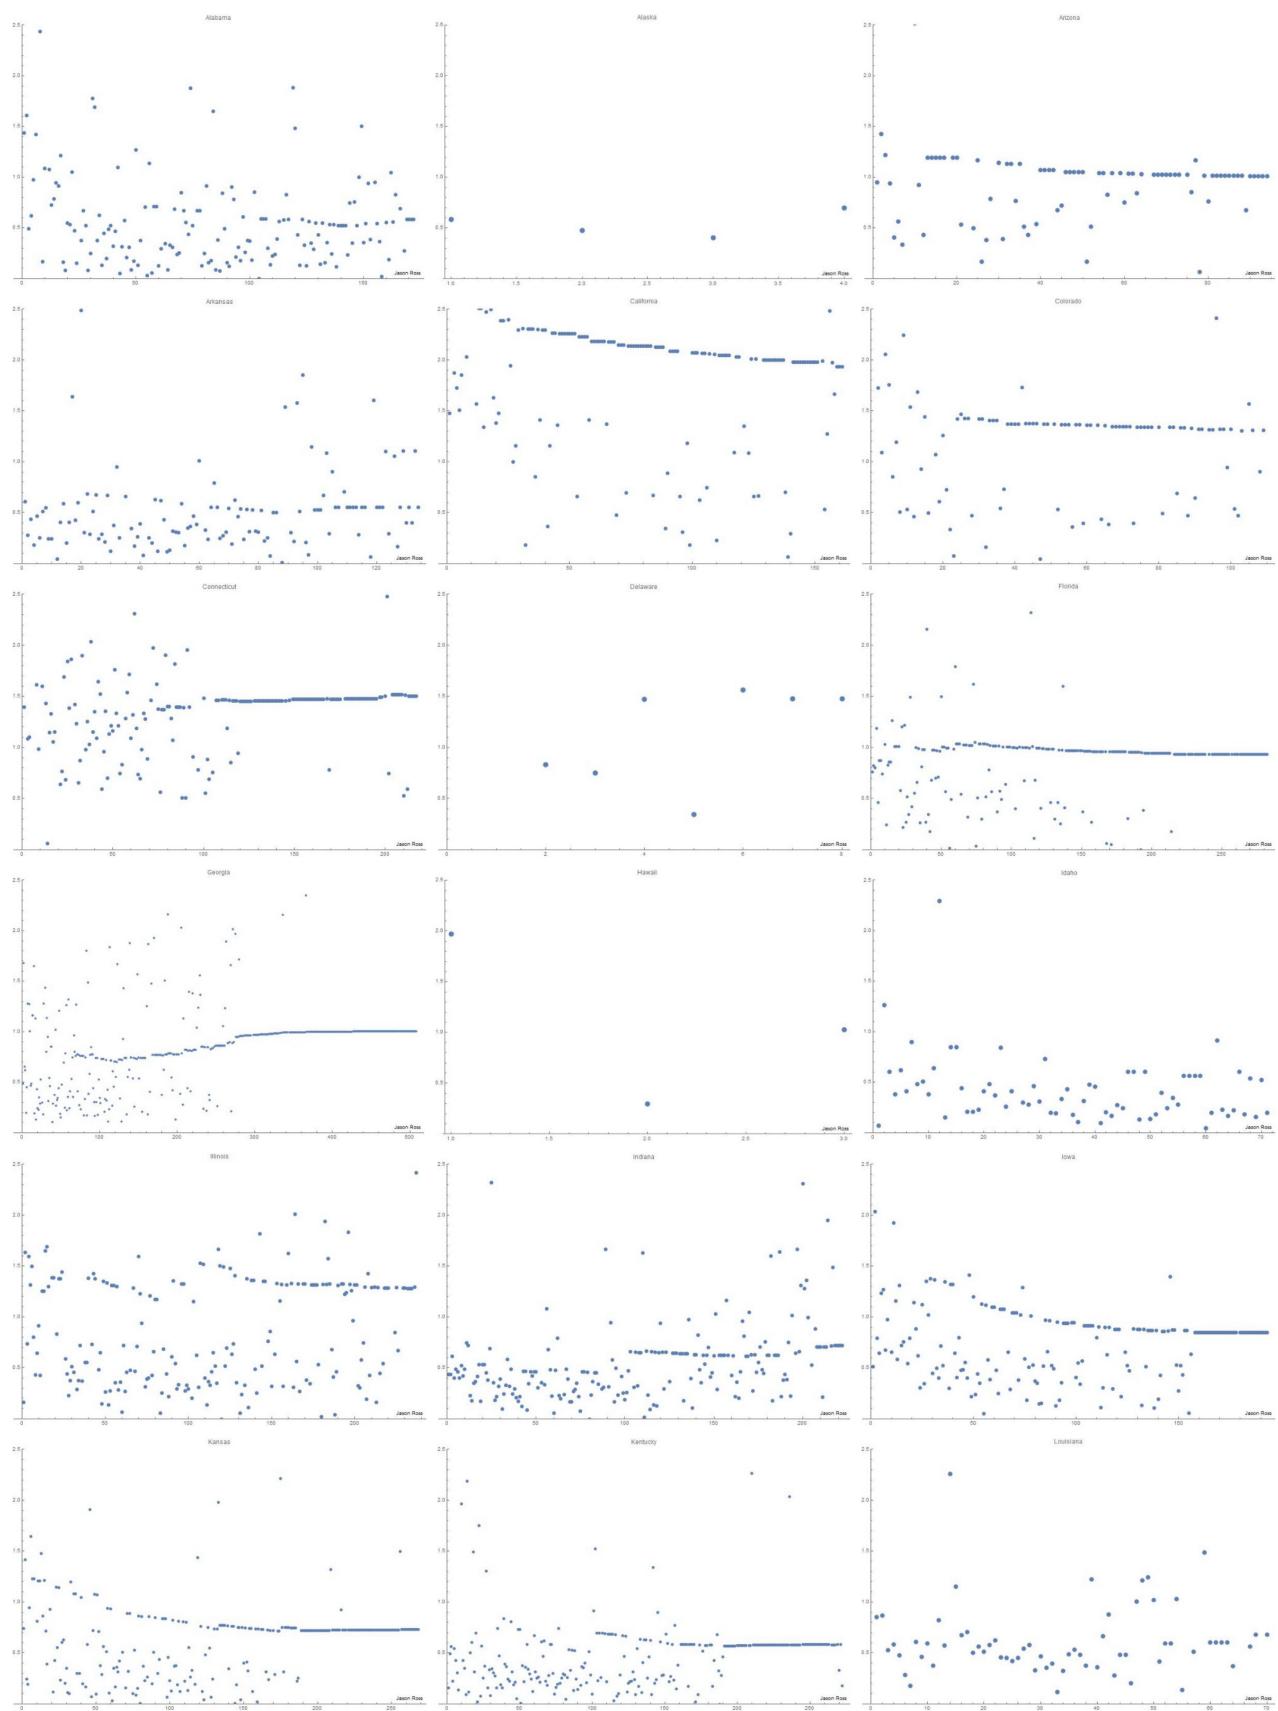

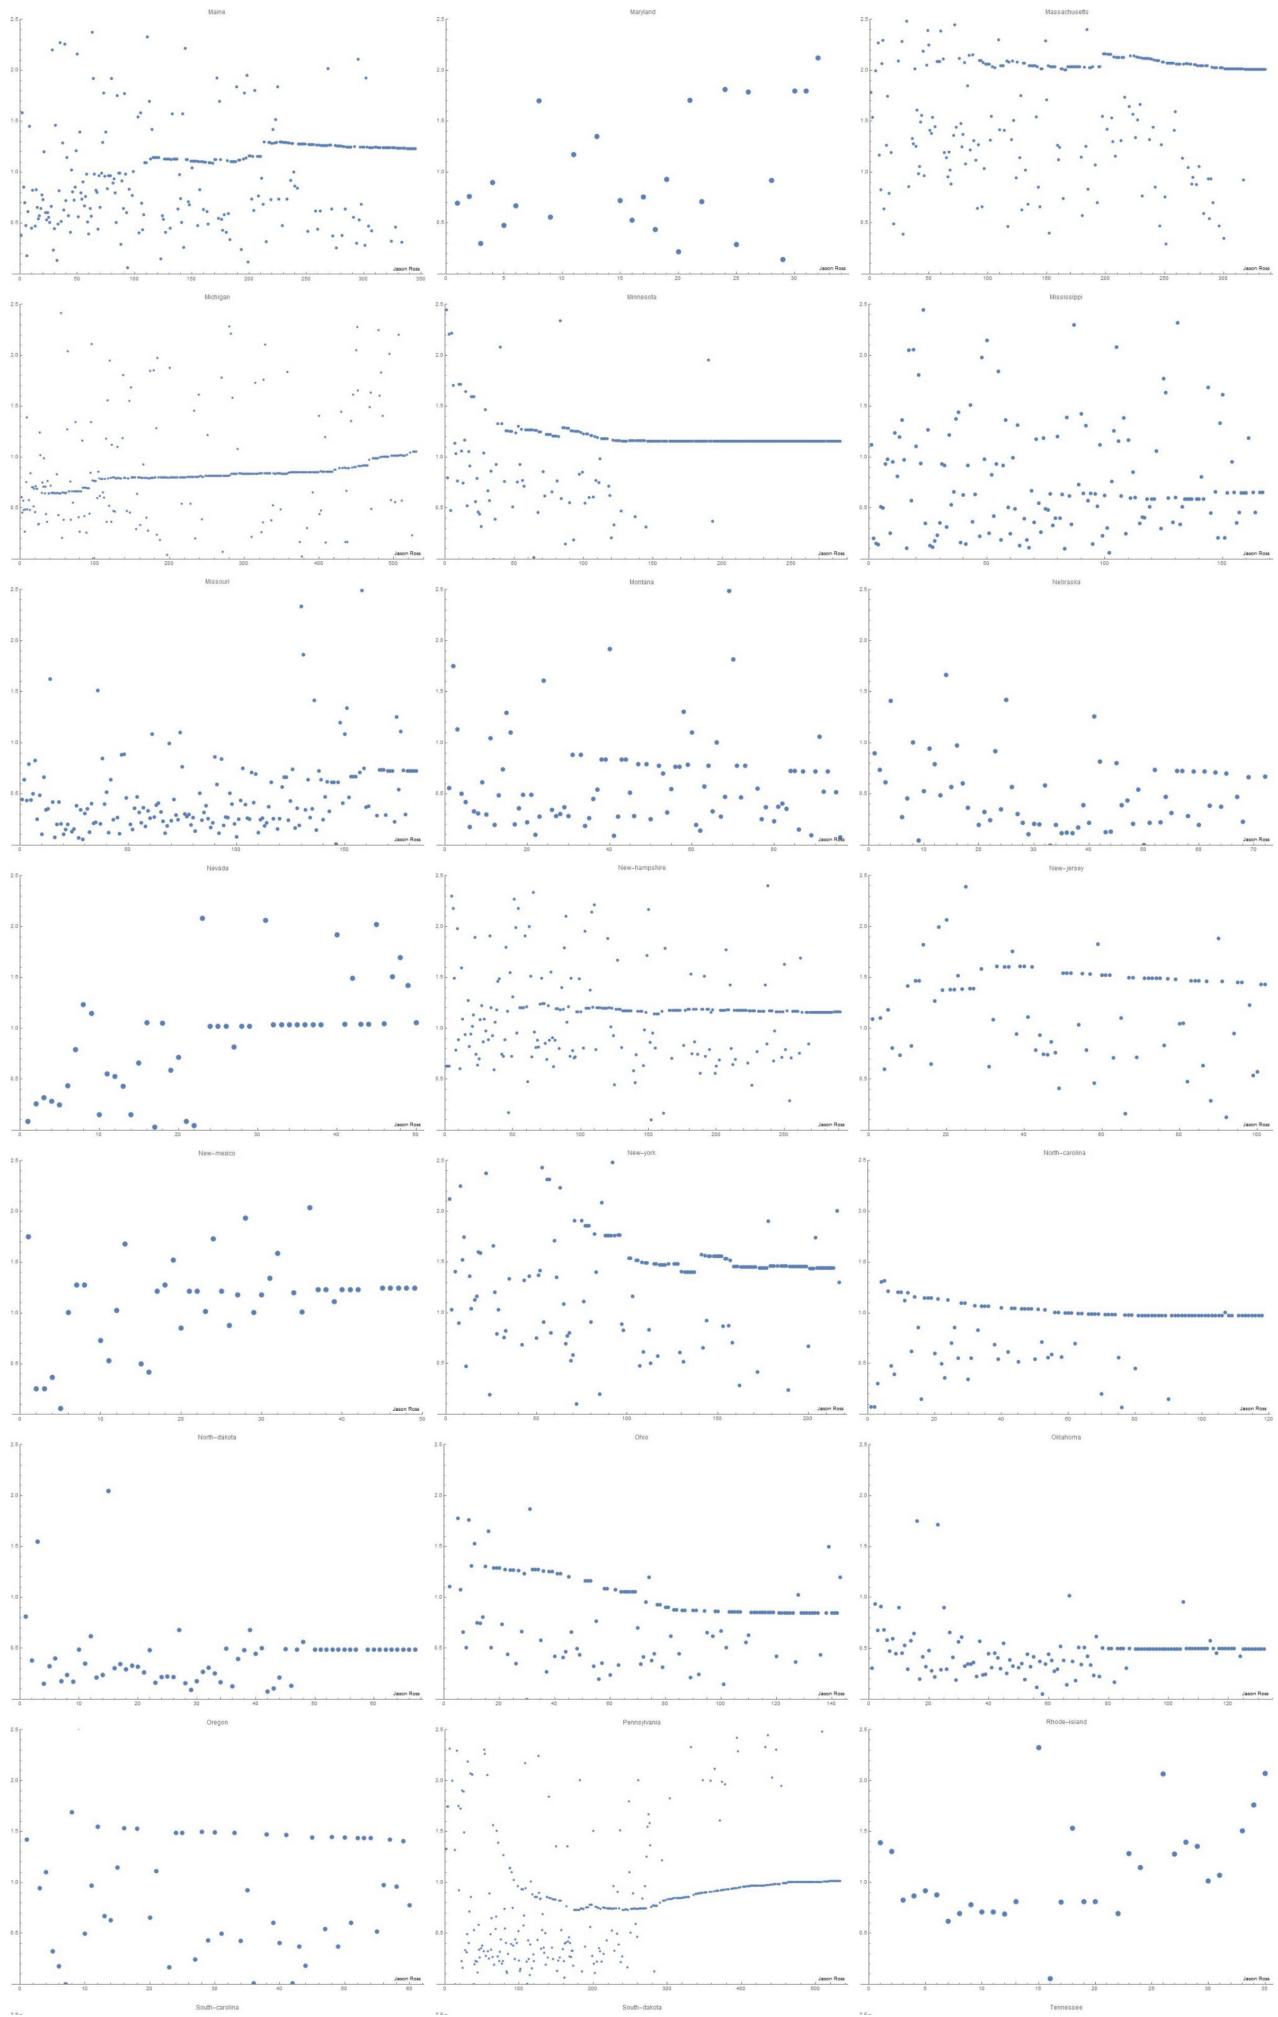

In contrast, Michigan shows a jagged increase in the Biden / Trump ratio. Does this reflect some form of electoral fraud?

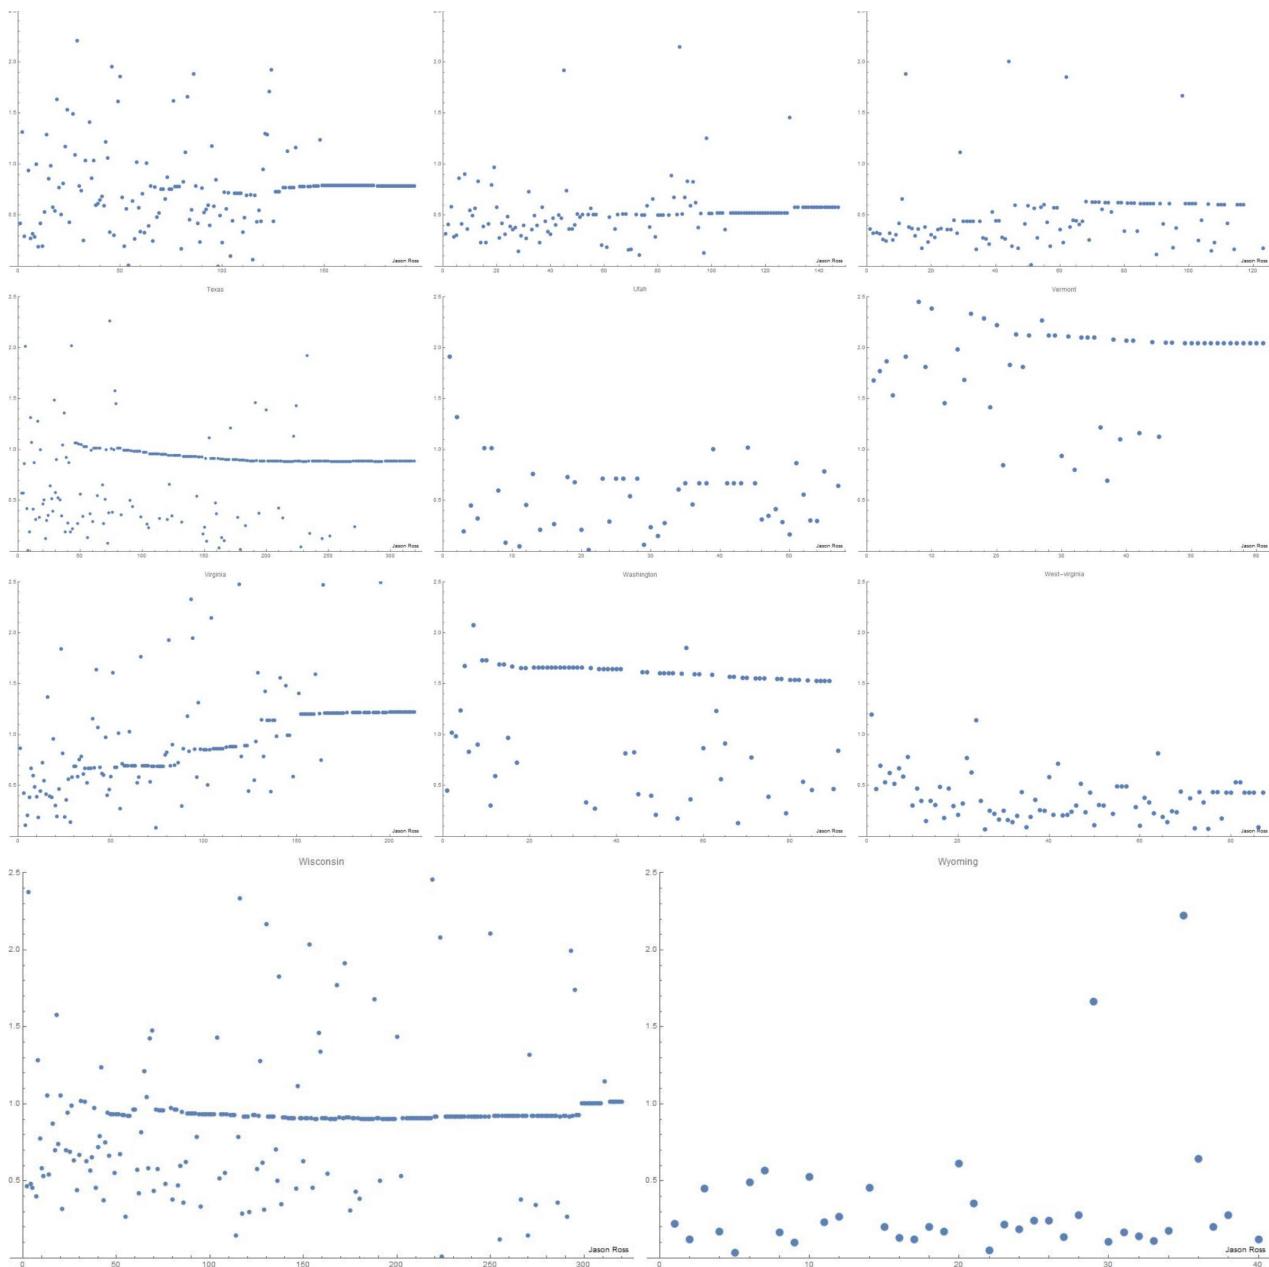

Curious, I created charts for all fifty states:

Different states process votes differently. To determine whether any conclusions could be drawn from these graphs, a next step would be to contrast these results with those of other statewide races, as well as to results from previous years.

More from Jason Ross

Follow

Jul 19

Sloppy Reporting Spreads Panic About Declining COVID-19 Antibodies

A July 11, 2020 preprint, “Longitudinal Evaluation and Decline of Antibody Responses in SARS-CoV-2 Infection,” authored by researchers at King’s College London, shows that the levels of SARS-CoV-2 neutralizing antibodies in the blood decrease, sometimes at a relatively rapid rate, only weeks or months after recovering from COVID-19. ...

Read more · 2 min read

May 9

CrowdStrike and Russiagate: Another Case of ‘Enormous Evidence’?

Documents from the House Intelligence Committee released on Thursday reveal that there was never any direct evidence that Russia actually stole any files from the DNC.

This destroys a primary claim of the Russiagate fairy tale—that Russian agents stole material that reflected poorly on Hillary Clinton from the DNC and released it to WikiLeaks to secure the election of Donald Trump, supposedly a pawn of the Russian president.

The House Intelligence Committee learned of this lack of evidence way back in December 2017, when it interviewed Shawn Henry, the President of CrowdStrike, the internet security firm that oversaw the investigation of the purported Russian DNC hack. ...

Read more · 4 min read

More From Medium

The Democratic National Convention was a Delusion of Unity
Sam Corey

To Have a Democracy, We Must Learn How to Persuade Each Other
Michael Austin

Does Inequality Matter?
Dave Olsen in Dialogue & Discourse

Why Trump Was Impeached
Sean Newhouse

‘Things Worth Fighting For’ With Allison Fine
Douglas Rushkoff in Team Human

What if Hillary had nominated a Kavanaugh?
Jeffrey Denny

Bodily Sovereignty: The Case For Death With Dignity
Kathy Copeland Padden

Visualizing the Costs of Government in “Border Walls”
BJ Campbell in Handwaving Freakoutery

